Current Market Report

All kinds of optimism has been around in the past month and a half as much needed moisture in the first week of June replenished drought stricken pastures and cultivatable land across western Canada. With the renewed optimism combined with hedge funds liquidating their short positions on the corn indexes, which has caused grain to drop massively on the grain futures, cattlemen are finally positioned to profit from their hard work...or are they? Yes, we will see strong prices this fall, but recent hail storms have wiped out several of these outstanding looking crops as far reaching from Central Alberta to Southern Alberta, and even as far East as Saskatchewan. Anywhere from 40% to 100% of some farmer's crops have been wiped out, and there will be no salvage; this will have an effect on the situation that only 2 weeks ago looked like we could never see another bad day as cattlemen. Now I'm not about to say this rally is over as it certainly is not, there will still be some outstanding prices to be had. However, one has to be cognizant of the fact that the harvest for the grain farmers is not in the bin yet, and many things can factor into the prices you will receive this fall between now and when you ship your hard-earned product! This is only a reminder of why we as cattlemen have to do business differently than our parents and grandparents did only as recent as 10 years ago; times change and how we do business and manage our risk as producers must change as the volatility and unpredictability of this world will continue to have an influence on our daily lives and how we move forward.
